Acknowledgements

First off, I'm bound to neglect to mention people who have been instrumental in this manual becoming a published reality, and I sincerely apologize for that right from the start.

Subconscious inspiration preceded the idea of ever producing this manual. Inspiration from many writers and scholars, including Joy Harjo, Toni Morrison, Lorraine Hansberry, Austin Channing Brown, Louise Erdrich, James Baldwin, Maya Angelou, Ibram X. Kendi, Ta-Nehisi Coates, A. Kirsten Mullen and William A. Darity Jr., Eric Foner, Heather McGhee, Richard Rothstein, Beverly Daniel Tatum, Resmaa Menachem, Isabel Wilkerson, Zora Neale Thurston, Natasha Trethewey, Robin Wall Kimmerer, and David Treuer, among many others. Inspiration from many civil rights and social justice activists, including Ida B. Wells-Barnett, Harriet Tubman, Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Wilma Mankiller, Congressman John Lewis, Ambassador Andrew Young, Andrea Young, Secretary Deb Haaland, Michelle Alexander, Bryan Stevenson, among many others. Inspiration from filmmakers, including Ava Duvernay, Spike Lee, and Regina King. Subconscious inspiration from hiking in cherished wild and sacred places like the Appalachian Trail, the Nantahala National Forest, The Great Smoky Mountains, and the Grand Canyon and Zion National Parks. I owe gratitude to all.

This manual is a collaboration. Thank you, Courtney Carmichael, for signing on to this project and making such extraordinary contributions to the whole, through your research, writing, data analysis, graphic design and for sharing some of your own story. And thank you helping me see more clearly.

Courtney and I are both indebted to all formerly enslaved Black Americans, their descendants, and to American Indians and their ancestors, whose stories – written and oral – provided foundational inspiration.

Belated thanks to my parents and ancestors for helping me to see and understand “the other.”

Thank you, Sam Allen, for being supportive and patient for the past couple of years, during which I have been submerged and so often not very accessible. And thank you for inspiring me through your own continuing self-examination and re-redistribution.

Thank you, Enid Draluck, our Full Circle Living partner, for continuously flagging important material for this manual and for your roadmap ideas. And thank you for always being a role model for personal – not abstract – involvement in working toward the Beloved Community/Universal Neighborhood.

It's a pleasure to think back on many other people to thank for also helping this manual come about, in every aspect, from conception to publishing.

Thank you, Ann Lally, for the initial prompt to even attempt writing this manual, and for engaging in open conversations with me about racism.

Thank you, Angela Green, for sharing your own memories and experiences over many years, for always providing the context of conscience, for being a role model to me for doing the right thing, and for your lifelong work toward social and economic justice.

Thank you, Gail Evans, for your early, thoughtful critique that gave me assurance to find and use and trust my voice when it came to telling my own story, and for your wise advice to not try to touch all the bases.

Thank you, Alexis Abramson, for guiding me and Courtney in how to self-publish and for connecting us to a wonderful professional proofreader, and to a great book cover designer, and for your encouragement.

Thank you, David Brown, Jerry Thomas, and Shemille and Stephen Ellis, for sharing some of your personal stories.

Thank you, Barbara Gibson, for teaching me about grace and embodying it so completely.

Thank you, Anita Sharpe, Chris Hoover, and Phil Zera, for devoting time to reading the manuscript and providing both valuable input and encouragement.

Thank you to my Bigger Game friends for being coaches who helped keep me on point.

Thanks to the D3s and other friends who checked in regularly with encouragement and who also flagged important and relevant articles, podcasts, etc.

Thanks to authors, scholars, and content creators for giving us permission to excerpt their work.

Thanks to The New York Times, National Public Radio, The Public Broadcasting Service, The On Being Project, The Atlantic, and The New Yorker for their continuous in-depth, insightful, and investigative reporting and programming on racial justice issues.

Thanks to Thien Vo for making room in your already full schedule to help finish, e-publish, launch and publicize this manual.

Thanks to people reading this manual.

Finally, thanks to everyone out there committed to achieving racial justice and equity in America. I look forward to meeting many of you on the re-redistribution road.

Angie Allen

Isabel Wilkerson makes note of this in her recent book Caste:

The thing I would hear from people time and time again after they read my book was, 'I had no idea.' I heard that all the time. I heard from people wherever in the country they might have been, different backgrounds, I had no idea. Well, not having an idea has consequences. It has consequences in how people vote, what policies they support, who people hire, who is granted mortgages, who can be assaulted by authorities with impunity, all of the things that we've talked about. And so if we don't know the history, we don't know what's gone before us. And that is why knowing the history is a huge part of it.
